

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE

Divine Revelation sees the relationship of religion and science as a reciprocal relationship. The religion that has its source in the Divine Revelation, is the guide for knowing God, while scientific knowledge argues that life and the whole universe has an inventor, the original creator, super-intelligent, with unlimited knowledge known as "God". Islam considers science as the real means of better understanding the instructions of Divine Revelation, from which religion derives its source. Seen in this light, these two must be in complete harmony with each other, but this is not always the case, as in the case of the theory of evolution by Charles Darwin, or the theories of some philosophers of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries that rely on materialist philosophy. In order to reach the true and unshakable faith, the Islamic religion, which has its source in the Divine Revelation, encourages man to acquire knowledge of the system of creation, of the wonders of nature, of the diversity of the living world, that wherever you look, argues the existence of God as the only creator, with unlimited knowledge and absolute power. This is the connection that exists between religion and scientific study that recognizes the divine source of every being in this world. So God Himself, who is one, without beginning or end of time, invites man to put into action his reason and abilities to discover the secrets of nature.